The Story

Prologue: Digne - 1815

After serving 19 years in prison for stealing a loaf of bread, convict number 24601, Jean Valjean, is released on parole by Inspector Javert and finds that he is condemned to be an outcast. Only the Bishop of Digne welcomes him to his home and treats him kindly. However, Valjean, repays him by stealing his silver and is caught by the police. Instead of telling the police of the theft, the Bishop lies and says silver was a gift which secures Valjean's release. Moved by the Bishop's love and generosity Valjean decides to start his life anew as an honest man and tears up his parole papers. Javert decides he will pursue the escaped convict and bring him to justice.

Montreuil-Sur-Mer - 1823

Eight years have passed since Valjean broke his parole and now, under a new identity, he has become a wealthy factory owner and the mayor of a small town. One of his workers, Fantine, is discovered by the other workers to secretly have an illegitimate child; the workers demand that she is fired. The factory owner (Valjean) leaves it to his foreman to decide her fate. The foreman fires her and sends her on her way.

Desperate for money to buy medicine for her daughter and unable to find work, Fantine is reduced to living a life as a prostitute. Suffering, sick and utterly degraded by her situation, Fantine gets into a fight with a prospective customer and is about to be taken to jail by Javert when the mayor (Valjean) arrives. Realizing that he has had a hand in her fate, the mayor has Fantine sent to the hospital instead where she is diagnosed with terminal tuberculosis.

In their encounter, Javert is reminded of the parole-breaking convict 24601. However, Jean Valjean, whom Javert has been tracking for years, has already allegedly been recaptured and stands trial. The mayor, unable to see an innocent man go to prison in his place, confesses that he is Jean Valjean.

At the hospital, Valjean makes a vow to the dying Fantine to find and raise her daughter, Cosette. Javert tries to arrest him but Valjean escapes to find Cosette.

Montfermeil - 1823

Valjean finds Cosette fetching water alone in the woods. She has been treated horribly for the last five years while living with the unscrupulous innkeeper, Monsieur Thenardier, his wife and their daughter, Eponine. Valjean pays the Thenardiers to let him take Cosette with him. After Valjean leaves with Cosette, Thenardier and his wife are angry that they did not command a high enough price for Cosette. Meanwhile, Javert continues to pursue Valjean as he and Cosette make their way to Paris...

Paris - 1832

Nine years later, the city of Paris is in a state of great unrest. Popular leader, General Lamarque, the only person who stands up for the poor, is on his deathbed. Street urchin, Gavroche, is in his element mixing with street gangs, beggars and the poor of Paris. Among the street gangs is one led by Thenardier, who sets upon Valjean and Cosette. The robbery is broken up by Javert who does not recognize Valjean until after he has disappeared in to the crowd. The Thenardier's daughter, Eponine, who is secretly in love with the student revolutionary Marius, reluctantly agrees to help Marius find Cosette, with whom he has fallen in love. Thenardier and his gang attempt to rob Valjean at his house; Eponine sounds the alarm. Thenardier leaves but Valjean thinks that Javier has found him and intends to immediately leave Paris.

The death of General Lamarque incites the students to revolt. They build a barricade on Rue Soufflot and the undercover Inspector Javier infiltrates their ranks. When Valjean finds out that Cosette's love, Marius, is among the students fighting at the barricade, he joins the fight as well and finds Javert, recognized by Gavroche, captured by the students. For Valjean's loyalty he is granted the execution of Javert. To Javert's astonishment, Valjean frees him, but Javert still promises Valjean that he will continue to hunt him.

After the bloody battle, Valjean escapes and saves an unconscious Marius. He meets Javert who lets him continue on his way. Javert, unable to reconcile the fact that criminal Valjean is a good person, commits suicide, unbeknownst to Valjean who still believes Javert is in pursuit. At Cosette and Marius' wedding Thenardier reveals that Valjean had saved Marius at the battle. Cosette and Marius rush to Valjean's deathbed in time for him to make his peace and say goodbye and the spirits of Fanine and Eponine guide Valjean to paradise.
